The Vatican's energy storage battery, likely costing $500,000, showcases the feasibility of green transitions for historic institutions. Falling technology prices and smart design make such projects ...

Pope Francis has unveiled a plan to transition Vatican City to solar energy as its primary source of electricity in his latest motu proprio "Fratello Sole" or "Brother Sun."

A full transition to solar power. So from now on, the seat of the Catholic Church runs almost entirely on clean energy; it is a powerful moment, not in policy, but in principle.

Their new solar plant isn't just panels - it's paired with lithium-ion batteries that could make Tesla jealous. Think of it as storing sunlight in a holy water font for nighttime use.

This upgrade not only cuts down on energy consumption but also reflects the Vatican's dedication to environmental stewardship, a core tenet of Pope Francis's teachings.

A solar panel system is being built on the 424 hectares of extraterritorial land in Ponte Galeria, which within a year will make the Holy See the first zero-emission state in the world.

This article explores how lithium-ion technology is reshaping energy management in religious and cultural hubs like the Vatican, while highlighting opportunities for global suppliers.

One of the most notable solar projects in Vatican City is the solar roof of the Paul VI Audience Hall. The photovoltaic panels installed here generate approximately 300,000 kilowatt-hours of energy annually.

Vatican officials have estimated it will cost under 100 million euros ($114 million) to develop the solar farm, and that once it is approved by the Italian parliament, the contracts to do the...
